INCANTANCY.

He says good-bye to Matilda.
And promises that she
Shall see him every night
Beside the rolling sea.
He promises a letter
Shall reach her every night,
Then down the road he wanders,
And passes out of sight.
He soon is at the ocean,
And there Matilda waits
With tears and little quiver,
And black and golden curls.
He takes them out and swirls,
He takes them out to the top,
And then they are all over,
And the early shadows
Visit the empty shore.
With them he goes a-bathing
Upon the shining strand,
And then they are all over,
Upon the shining sand.
He takes them to the beach,
And on the horses' backs,
And then they are all over,
And the early shadows
Visit the empty shore.
And Matilda is Matilda,
And the paragon and pearl,
And then they are all over,
And the early shadows
Visit the empty shore.

THE RATIONALE OF HAUNTED HOUSES.

That a very old house should gain the reputation of being haunted is not surprising, especially if it has been neglected and allowed to fall into ruin. The woodwork shrinks, the plaster crumbles away, and through minute slits and chinks in window-frames and door-cases there comes weird and uncanny noises. The wind sighs and whispers through unseen fissures suggesting the disembodied spirits of the dead. As the house grows old and the household is thrown into consternation, and had its repose disturbed on stormy winter, by a series of loud howls and shrieks that rang through the rooms. The sounds were harrowing, and as the wind died away, the intervals, breaking the silence of the night, the stoutest nerves among the listeners were shaken. For a long time the visitation continued to harass the family, recurring by day as well as by night, and especially in rough weather, when there was a rattling of wind and shrieks would come so sudden and startling, changing from low, melancholy wails. It was unaccountable. At length the mystery was solved. Complaints had been made of draughts through the house, and as a remedy strips of gutta-serena had been used, and the windows were closed, and the draughts were stopped. The house was now a perfect storm, and the draughts were stopped. The house was now a perfect storm, and the draughts were stopped.

Meantime the house got a bad reputation, and servants were shy of entering it. A maid, however, who was strong-minded, and the others, who had hitherto laughed at their fears, came fleeing to her mistress on one occasion, saying that she must leave instantly, and that nothing would induce her to pass another night under the roof. There was a long corridor at the top of the house, and the girl's story was, that in passing along it, she heard footsteps behind her. Stopping and looking back she saw no one; but as soon as she went on the invisible pursuer did so, too, following close behind. Two or three times she stood still, suddenly, hoping the footsteps would pass on and give her the go-by; instead of which they pulled up when she did, and when at last, wild with terror, she took to her heels and ran, they came clattering along after her to the end of the passage.

The mistress suspected that someone was trying to frighten the girl, and she urged her to come up stairs and endeavor to find out the trick. This the terrified maid refused to do, so the lady went of alone. On reaching the corridor and passing the door at which she was startled, she found that the maid had described, some one seemed to be following her—tap, tap, clack, clack, as of one walking slipshod with shoes down at the heel—came the steps, keeping pace with her own, stopping when she stopped, and moving on when she moved. In vain the lady peered around and beside her; nothing was to be seen. It could be no trick for there was no body in that part of the house to play a practical joke.

Ever long the cause was discovered in the shape of a loose board in the flooring of the corridor, and the plan was started to find that, as the maid had described, some one seemed to be following her—tap, tap, clack, clack, as of one walking slipshod with shoes down at the heel—came the steps, keeping pace with her own, stopping when she stopped, and moving on when she moved.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Democratic Committee Notices Governor Cleveland of His Nomination—The Proceedings.

ALBANY, N. Y., July 22.—The ceremony of formally notifying Governor Cleveland of his nomination for the Presidency took place in the hall of the Democratic Convention at Albany, N. Y., this morning. The Governor, who was seated at the head of the table, received the notification with a smile. The notification was read by a member of the committee, and the Governor responded by a short speech, in which he expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him by the party.

The Governor's speech was enthusiastically received, and the hall rang with applause. The Governor then turned to the members of the committee, and expressed his confidence in their wisdom and ability. He then turned to the audience, and expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him by the party. The Governor's speech was enthusiastically received, and the hall rang with applause.

GENERAL LONGSTREET.

How He Has Been Left Out in the Cold After Serving the Republic.

ALBANY, N. Y., July 22.—There is something peculiar about General Longstreet as he appears on the street, out of position, thrown overboard by his party friends and avoided by those who cannot help feeling a sympathy with the historic figure whose brilliant military career has made him one of the most famous of Confederate generals during the late war. As he comes out of the hall of the Democratic Convention, he is met by a crowd of people, and he is surrounded by a group of men, who are talking to him and shaking hands with him.

General Longstreet is a man of a commanding presence, and he is a man of a commanding presence. He is a man of a commanding presence, and he is a man of a commanding presence. He is a man of a commanding presence, and he is a man of a commanding presence. He is a man of a commanding presence, and he is a man of a commanding presence.
